Circuit in Themselves. (Philadelphia Press.) Van Ogden Vogt, the new general secretary of the Christian Endeavor society, is a good story teller. At the Leaders' institute he related an anecdote of a Missouri farmer. "The farmer," said he, "had thirteen children. A circus came to town, and the farmer had only the price of one admission. However, he was a good trader, and told his wife to bundle all the children into the wagon and he would see what he could do. Arrived at the tent he told his dilemma to the show man and wanted to know if he couldn't fix it so that each of his offspring could see part of the show, while the rest waited outside."

"Take the whole bunch in," said the showman, "and if the crowd comes in too strong, they'll have to turn out."

"After the performance was over the honest farmer sought out the proprietor to pay him the price agreed upon, when the man said:

"I can't take your money, I sat right behind your children, and I had as much fun out of it as they did."

"Hello, Senator Hanna! How are you feeling after your strenuous campaign in Ohio?" asked a western member of congress in Washington the other day.

"I am feeling all right, except a little tired and run down—a sort of reaction after the battle," replied the senator.

"Why don't you go away for a week's rest?"

"I can't. I am like the chap who was out one night playing poker, and when he got home the next morning his wife noticed stains on his waistcoat. She asked what they were, and he said he supposed they must be tobacco juice."

"But can't you turn your head when you expectorate?" she inquired.

"Not while sitting in the game with that crowd of fellows," he replied.

Would Have Walked, Too. (New York Tribune.) They tell this story in the commissioner's office at Ellis Island: Two Irish immigrants just arrived stood one morning on the government landing watching a dredger at work a few yards away. Presently a diver, fully rigged, crawled painfully from the channel slime up a ladder to the deck of the dredge. One of the Irishmen, very much surprised, turned to his companion and said:

"Look at that mon! Look at him. Begorra, if I'd known the way over I'd walked, too."
